Law practice is much more than Torts, Civ Pro and Property. To help our students and alumni keep current with the latest trends in the legal practice, The John Marshall Law School has initiated new certificate programs in the emerging areas of Elder Law, Health Law and Sustainability. In addition, LLM programs in Trial Advocacy and Dispute Resolution (ADR) and Estate Planning are being added after the American Bar Association gave its acquiescence, a step that is required before either LLM program could be offered.

“This is part of an evolution of our law school that began a few years ago,” said Dean John E. Corkery. “Our graduates are getting these highly sought-after jobs with distinguished judges today because they are talented and accomplished students who have worked hard and taken full advantage of the programs we offer at John Marshall to help them succeed in law and in life.”

The John Marshall graduate and current clerk with the most experience undoubtedly is Mary Barry (JD ’04) whose job out of law school was clerking for Judge Bruce Black, chief judge of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Illinois, a position she’s held for seven years. Barry said as a student she externed with the U.S. Trustee’s Office. Black became familiar with Barry’s work during her time as a law student.

Graduates of The John Marshall Law School are seeing increasing success in their efforts to win federal judicial clerkships. Eight alumni and two students are clerking or have received offers to clerk at the U.S. District Courts, U.S. Bankruptcy Court, and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. There also are nine alumni currently working as attorney advisers in the U.S. Social Security Administration in Chicago, positions similar to judicial clerkships.

As a law school dean, the question I get asked most often these days is: “How’s your enrollment?” Well, our enrollment is good. Our applications have been up and we have a full complement of excellent, enthusiastic law students who want to succeed in their careers and use their skills to help others and themselves. Our goal is to prepare our students to succeed in their careers and in life, no matter what the challenges are. And we are hard at work at it.

As you know, the job market for lawyers continues to be difficult and to acquire substantive knowledge and skills in particular areas of law that are in high demand today. The certificates and advanced degrees provide particular expertise for our graduates to compete effectively, especially in this economy.”

“While earning a certificate or a graduate degree may be of specific interest to some, I am encouraging alumni to look at the depth of our programs,” said Sherri Berendt, director of Alumni Relations. “They may find a class that can benefit them in their practice, and at the same time can help complete their CLE hours.

“Alumni also will find that we are increasing the number of online courses, so whether you’re in the Chicago area or out of state, John Marshall may be able to serve your educational needs.”
The John Marshall Law School is welcoming five new professors to its faculty. Professors Margaret Kwoka, Daryl Lim and Benjamin Liu are new to the law school faculty. Professors Marc Ginsberg and Scott Shepard, who have been teaching at the law school the past two years, are moving from visiting professor to assistant professor rank.

“We are delighted to welcome them to our law school,” said Dean John E. Corkery. “As a group, they bring to us unique backgrounds in law practice, law teaching, and public service. They will enrich our curriculum and contribute to classroom teaching and scholarship.”

Kwoka is coming to John Marshall after completing a one year clerkship with Judge Michael Murphy of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. She also has clerked for Chief Justice Phillip Rrapoza at the Massachusetts Appeals Court.

At John Marshall, Kwoka is teaching Civil Procedure and Administrative Law. She has been a lecturer at George Washington University School of Law co-teaching a Public Interest Lawyering seminar; an attorney with the Public Citizen Litigation Group in Washington, D.C., as an Equal Justice Works Fellow; and the associate mentor for law and policy with the Jack Kent Cooke Foundation working directly with three high-achieving, low-income high school students interested in a career in law and policy.

After receiving a bachelor’s degree in biology from Brown University, she served with the Peace Corps in West Africa. She received a law degree from Northeastern University School of Law. As a law student, she received the Outstanding Graduate Student Award; served as a research assistant in International Human Rights Law; and co-wrote a petition for certiorari to the U.S. Supreme Court on a death penalty case.

Lim has been instrumental in the 2011 establishment of a JD certificate program in Health Law. This semester he is teaching IP specialty courses, including Patent and Trade Secret Law, Advanced Patent Law and the IP-Antitrust interface.

He was an associate at both the litigation as well as the IP and technology groups at Allen & Gledhill LLP, Singapore’s largest law firm. Lim was an intern with Chief Judge Randall R. Rader at the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, and for Commissioner William E. Kovacic at the Federal Trade Commission. He also was a researcher at the Max Planck Institute for IP and Competition Law in Munich, and at Queen Mary Intellectual Property Law Institute in London.

Lim has graduate law degrees from Stanford University and the National University of Singapore (NUS). He received an undergraduate degree in law and economics from NUS, and in economics and management from the London School of Economics and Political Science. At Stanford, he received the Franklin Family Fellowship and was awarded the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation Research Grant.

His articles have been published in leading IP law reviews and books in the U.S., Europe and Asia. Lim’s forthcoming book, Patent Misuse: An Empirical Study, will be published by Edward Elgar Publishing. In 2009, he received the Grand Prize in the International Association for the Advancement of Teaching and Research in IP’s International Essay Writing Competition which formed the basis of the lead articles in the forthcoming issue of IDEA: The IP Law Review. His current writing projects include co-authoring the patent and IP-antitrust sections of an IP casebook to be published by West Publishing in 2012.

Ginsberg joined the faculty in 2009 as a visiting professor after 30 years in private practice, and more than 15 years as a John Marshall adjunct faculty member. This semester he is teaching Evidence and Civil Procedure. He has been instrumental in the 2011 establishment of a JD certificate program in Health Law.

Ginsberg’s most recent articles are “At Long Last, A Long Look At Respondents In Discovery” to be published by the Southern Illinois University Law Journal and “Informed Consent: No Longer Just What The Doctor Ordered? The ‘Contributions’ Of Medical Associations And Courts To A More Patient Friendly Doctrine,” published in the Michigan State University Journal Of Medicine And Law.

Ginsberg practiced with Rooks Pitts and its successor firm, Dykema Gossett PLLC, as a litigation partner in Chicago concentrating in trial and appellate cases, primarily in defense of physicians in medical litigation and litigation.

Ginsberg received a BA degree with honors from the University of Illinois at Chicago; an MA degree from Indiana University; a JD degree with highest distinction from The John Marshall Law School; and an LLM in Health Law from DePaul University College of Law.

Before coming to John Marshall, Shepard was a visiting professor at Wake Forest University School of Law in the 2008-2009 academic year, and the Olin/Searle Fellow resident at Vanderbilt University Law School for the 2007-2008 academic year.

Shepard was a law clerk for Judge Jerry E. Smith in the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit before going to work at the Washington, D.C., firms of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering and Ropes & Gray. In 2004, he joined the Office for Civil Rights at the U.S. Department of Education, where he was an attorney advisor.

Shepard moved to Sacramento, Calif., to serve as managing attorney for the Pacific Legal Foundation, where he managed and developed the Western Water Law Project, working toward preserving private-property water rights. He litigated in state and federal courts and publicly defended issues of property, environmental and personal liberty law.

Shepard’s primary area of research is property law, especially the relative efficacy of the various legal systems of property management. His article “Adverse Possession, Private-Zoning Waiver & Desuetude: Abandonment & Recapture of Liberty and Property Interests” was recently published by the University of Michigan Journal of Law Reform, and he discussed “Which the Deader Hand? A Counter to the ALI’s Proposed Revival of Dying Perpetuities Rules” as a presenter at the 2010 Central States Law Schools Association Conference.

Shepard received a BA degree from the University of Richmond, an MA degree from Vanderbilt University, and a JD degree with Order of the Coif from the University of Virginia School of Law. In the 2011-2012 academic year, he is teaching Property, Natural Resources and Estates and Trusts.

the competition for existing jobs is very tough. Although I believe the job market will turn around, that is cold comfort to students who are well prepared and want to get started. So this semester, I’m meeting individually with many students and grads and calling lawyers I know to see if I can find a good job match for them. If you hear of a place looking to hire a good lawyer, please email me at 7corkery@jmls.edu. I will make sure we supply great candidates for the job.

New Construction Update

While the economy continues to sort itself out, we are taking major strides to improve our physical facilities. One of our biggest endeavors is our new $16 million campus expansion, which includes major renovations of the first two floors of the 304 State St. building and a large portion of 19 W. Jackson St., the building which we purchased last September.

In June, I was privileged to stand alongside other school, city and construction officials—with hard hats and sledgehammers firmly in hand—to kick off the State Street portion of this project. When completed in March 2012, the State Street construction will give us a new presence and address on State Street that reflects the contributions our school has made to the legal community over the past 112 years. We will also be maintaining our current entrance on Plymouth Court for ease of access to our school. In addition to launching our new entrance on State Street, the June kickoff also marked the beginning of construction of our new 6,000 square-foot Student Commons area, on the first two floors of the 304 State St. building that will include a book store and food service areas.

As Jordan Peters, our board of trustee’s Building Committee chairman has said, the expansion not only affords us much needed space but gives the law school the image and presence it so richly deserves—right in the heart of State Street’s South Loop Education Corridor. Thanks to all who helped cheer on the groundbreaking ceremony.

And more changes are scheduled, as we’ve started updates on the 100-year-old 19 W. Jackson building, which will be refurbished on a floor-by-floor basis. The first floor of 19 West will be the new home of our Veterans Legal Support Center & Clinic, which will be completed near the end of 2012.

Technology in the Practice of Law

The new construction is emblematic of the many good things now underway here at John Marshall, including renovating our classrooms, adding new law practice technology to our courtrooms, and upgrading our faculty support facilities. In addition to our two new high technology courtrooms added last year, we have also just completed our new small class high technology teaching courtroom and classroom on the 11th floor. These three high tech venues will give us an opportunity to teach students in a small class setting how to use technology necessary for the practice of law today. This fall students in our Litigation Technology course in the new LLM in Trial Advocacy program, were each given iPad tablets to help them learn about the use of mobile devices and apps in the practice of law. We also are providing our students with access to the new “smart” technology in phones and tablets and providing instruction in eDiscovery and information management, so necessary in practice today.

Naming Opportunities

All of these projects, the Student Commons on State Street, and the Veterans Clinic at 19 West, and our new small class high technology teaching courtroom present exciting new naming opportunities for us. For information on these, please let me or John Lee, our Foundation president, know of your interest.

Online LLM’s

Our Employee Benefits LLM and MS programs are now fully online, with another online program in Estate Planning set for 2012. I believe our investment in “distance education” for LLM students will help us meet the demands of our future students. It also is likely that some JD courses after the first year will have online aspects to them. These programs will help us improve our existing classes by using newer blended learning delivery techniques. Assistant Professor and Director of Lawyering Skills Anthony Niedwiecki, for example, will be introducing an online interactive module about the new Illinois Citation rules. This module, one of many planned online offerings, is used to teach Lawyering Skills I.

JMLS Legal Writing News

Professor Niedwiecki was recently profiled in Chicago Lawyer magazine and in 2012 he will take on the presidency of the Association of Legal Writing Directors (ALWD), the national organization of law school teaching directors committed to the improvement of legal writing. His good work and recognition by his peers is a reflection of the efforts we have put into improving our Legal Writing Program which is ranked sixth in the country by U.S. News & World Report.

JMLS Receives Grants

This year the JMLS Foundation, headed by John Lee (JD ’73) has received a number of new grants. Examples include a $60,000 grant from the U.S.—China Legal Cooperation Fund to expand our exchange programs within our Chinese Intellectual Property Resource Center (CIPRC), the first legal education center in...
A Message from Hon. James Fitzgerald Smith
President of the Alumni Association

Greetings Fellow Alumni,

What do you remember about your days at The John Marshall Law School?

Whether you’re out five years or 25 years, I want you to know things at the law school are not the way you remember them. This is a legal institution that continues to meet the challenges posed by a new student generation and changes in the business of law.

After graduating from the evening division in 1975 and beginning the pursuit of my legal career, I realized the unique value of my John Marshall education.

As the new president of The John Marshall Law School Alumni Association, I now send this message to you—come back to John Marshall. Join us at alumni programs, or just find your way back to Plymouth Court for a short visit. I can guarantee you’ll be pleasantly surprised by all that is going on inside the law school.

Did you know John Marshall now has three courtrooms with the latest technology so our students will know how to present their case in the courtrooms of today? Clinical Professor Susann “Sunny” MacLachlan (JD ’94) is director of the Center for Trial Advocacy and Dispute Resolution and has been working to keep our students current with what attorneys are doing in preparing for and presenting at trial.

Our Fair Housing Legal Clinic directed by Professor Allison Bethel, Veterans Legal Support Center & Clinic co-directed by Joseph Butler (JD ’95) and Brian Clauss (JD ’90), and our new Business Transactions Program directed by Michael Schlesinger (JD ’70) are giving students hands-on experience in dealing with clients and learning how best to represent them.

The law school initiated a Pro Bono Program last year. It has enabled our students to work with attorneys representing a former death row inmate, help residents struggling with foreclosure issues as volunteers at the JusticeCorps Mortgage Foreclosure Mediation Program, and offer general legal information as volunteers for Illinois Legal Aid Online LiveHelp services.

When you need CLE credit, link to John Marshall’s website for a list of upcoming events that will help keep you current while you fulfill your CLE required hours.

My fellow board members and I are asking you to recognize that your expertise can be of value to our students. They look for mentors who can teach them the best interviewing skills, networking techniques and courtroom presentation and etiquette. I know John Marshall prepared you well for your career. I encourage you to step forward to help the next generation of John Marshall alumni.

We always want to hear from you. You can contact me through the Office of Alumni Relations at 312.427.2737, ext. 943.

Sincerely,

Justice James Fitzgerald Smith

the U.S. dedicated to the study of Chinese intellectual property rights issues. We were one of only three U.S. law schools to receive such grants this time, the others are Cornell Law School and Vermont Law School. We are very pleased with this grant and will use it well.

Chinese IP Resource Center

We had the ribbon cutting ceremony Aug. 23 for the official grand opening of CIPRC on the 17th floor of the 321 building. We had an overflow crowd of 70 people and welcomed several guests from China, including Gan Shaoning, the deputy consul general of the Chinese Consulate in Chicago; Yufeng (Ethan) Ma, a board member at McAndrews Held & Malloy Ltd.; Chief Judge James Holderman and Judge Charles Kocoras of the United States District Court-Northern District of Illinois; Judge Michael Mihm of the United States District Court for the Central District of Illinois; and William Spence, co-chair of the Chicago Sister Cities International Program-China Committee.

Veteran’s Clinic

In addition, our Veterans Legal Support Center & Clinic has secured an outright program grant of $10,000 and an additional $100,000 challenge grant from an anonymous corporate donor. The funding will help us construct new clinic facilities to better serve those whose lives have been impacted by their military service. To meet the “challenge” and receive the $100,000 grant, the school must raise $100,000 in additional funds for the project by Oct. 31. We are hard at work at raising these funds. For more details on how to help us meet this $100,000 challenge, please visit www.jmls.edu/give.

Professionalism and IP Directors

Lastly, I’d like to spotlight a couple names you should recognize. Retired Illinois Appellate Court Justice Margaret “Peg” Frossard has joined us as the new director of Professionalism and Engagement. She will work with our students on matters of professionalism and with our staff on meeting our students’ expectations here at John Marshall. And Bill McGrath, of Davis McGrath LLP, who has served as our associate director for the Center for Intellectual Property Law, is taking over as the Center’s interim director. Please join me in recognizing them both in their new roles.

Sincerely,

Joseph Butler (JD ’95) and Brian Clauss (JD ’90), and our new Challenge Allows You to Double Your Gift to Benefit the Veterans Center & Clinic

Did you know you can double your gift to The John Marshall Law School by making a contribution for the Veterans Legal Support Center & Clinic (VLSC)?

The John Marshall Law School Foundation is working to raise $100,000 in matching funds for a challenge grant by Oct. 31, 2011. All donations will be used to help the Clinic move from its cramped quarters in the Plymouth Court building to first floor space in our newly acquired 19 W. Jackson building. This build-out will give us the additional space the Clinic desperately needs, and it will make the facility easily accessible to all who inquire about the Clinic’s work and free services.

The VLSC was the first law school clinical program in the country devoted solely to veterans legal issues. Since its founding in 2007, our students and a network of attorneys across Illinois have provided assistance to more than 3,000 veterans to win medical and educational benefits they are entitled to, but often denied. In addition, our Clinic staff has worked with the Circuit Court of Cook County to address the needs of veterans through a special Veterans Court Program.

Help us continue this important mission. We look forward to receiving your gift for the VLSC Challenge Grant at www.jmls.edu/give or send a check to the foundation office at 321 S. Plymouth Ct., Chicago, IL 60604. Should you need additional information, contact John Lee, president of the Foundation, at 312.386.2871.

U.S.-China Legal Cooperation Fund Gift Leads to New U.S.-China IP Exchanges

When the Chinese Intellectual Property Resource Center at The John Marshall Law School had its grand opening in August 2011, a special thanks was extended from The John Marshall Law School Foundation to the U.S.-China Legal Cooperation Fund for its generous gift of $60,000 fostering an international partnership.

Herbert J. Hansell, co-chair of the fund’s board of trustees, said the organization applauds the staff at the Chinese IP Resource Center for its work on the initiative, “U.S.-China: An International Partnership for Advancing Respect in the Field of Intellectual Property (IP) Rights.” The funding from the U.S.-China Legal Cooperation Fund will help foster innovative exchange programs between American and Chinese law students, IP specialists, engineers and judges under the umbrella of the U.S.-China Intellectual Property Exchange Program. We expect it will be an exciting year as we begin this new initiative.

The Chinese IP Resource Center was founded in response to the growing importance of Chinese IP laws and issues in connection with world commerce and IP development. The Center has been the dream of Dean John E. Corkery and Dorothy In-Lan Wang Li, director of the law school’s Asian Alliance Program. They first approached Chinese attorneys about the idea for a Center two years ago when John Marshall and China’s State Intellectual Property Office (SIPO) marked the 15th anniversary of their cooperative partnership.

The law school’s partnership with China is nearing the 20-year mark. It is an exciting time to be working in close cooperation with one of the world’s fastest growing countries as we learn together in mutual cooperation. Your gift can help us continue this partnership and the growth of the Chinese IP Resource Center. Please consider making a gift at www.jmls.edu/give.
I am happy to announce that Lauren Prihoda, (JD '10), has joined the alumni office as assistant director. Lauren will be working closely with our Young Alumni Council and developing programs that help our students engage more with our alumni community. She has already proven to be a valuable member of the team!

This has been an exciting summer around John Marshall. The construction started on both the old Walgreen’s space to convert it to our new Student Commons, and the 19 W. Jackson building, the future home of our Veterans Clinic and other departments. The Foundation also has secured some exciting grants that are really elevating our fundraising numbers.

Last month, I sent a letter to my fellow ’99 classmates asking them to give back to our alma mater. I asked my classmates to make a $19.99 gift, and many of them responded to the call. I really love the “But for John Marshall” stories that I hear and I have my own “But for John Marshall” story, too. We are at a very crucial time in the fundraising history of John Marshall and are asking everyone to make a gift. If you have never made a donation to John Marshall, please consider making your gift in the amount of your graduating year.

We say “every gift matters” because it truly does! The total percentage of our alumni that donate to the school is a very important number to foundations that are evaluating our grant applications. So, this is a case where every gift really does matter.

We have a full alumni relations event plan for the year. We are visiting cities that we haven’t visited in some time, including Dallas and Houston, and have added some new events. For example, come join us for a night at Chicago’s Lyric Opera on Jan. 11, 2012, for a performance of “The Magic Flute.”

I hope you enjoy reading about all that we are doing and that you will help us meet our goal to increase the number of alumni who are giving back to our school.

And if you are so inclined, share your “But for John Marshall” story with me at sberendt@jmls.edu.

Warmest Regards,

Sherri J. Berendt (JD ’99)
Director of Alumni Relations and Annual Fund Programming

The May 2011 Freedom Award & DSA Luncheon

Guests at the Freedom Award luncheon were (from left) Joseph Cataldo (JD ’92), Circuit Court of Cook County Judge James Ryan (JD ’92), Frank Andreou (JD ’95) and John Fotopoulos (JD ’00).
The Elder Law Studies Program was designed by Barry Kozak (JD/LLM ’00). The curriculum focuses on life planning and durable powers of attorney, estate planning and wills and trusts, conservatorship and guardianship, health care planning, Medicare/Medicaid planning, employee benefits, prevention and prosecution of elder abuse, and public policy regarding the rights of the elderly.

Beyond understanding the appropriate laws, students also learn to mediate between family members and deal with ethical, moral and societal issues that affect the elderly.

The cutting-edge curriculum includes the prerequisites Financial Aspects and Planning and Preserving Dignity and Independence of the Elderly. The advanced classes address specific issues, such as the attorney’s role in court-appointed guardianship, navigating federal and state bureaucracies for benefits; and drafting elder law legal documents.

The new Health Law Certificate Program was developed because of a societal need for such specialization and in response to student interest in health law.

John Marshall is an innovator in offering courses in health law, according to Professor Marc Ginsburg (JD ’77) who helped organize the new program. In addition to the nine required credits, students will choose from an array of courses, including those relating to technology, privacy, public health issues, litigation and legal drafting. The curriculum also includes an innovative course that teaches students the lawyering skills for drafting legal documents and performing the skills required of health law professionals.

Sustainability is a new specialization that can make attorneys competitive in the emerging, interdisciplinary area which is of increasing importance in real estate, environmental and regulatory legal work. After completing required courses in energy law, environmental law, local government law, real estate transactions and sustainability in modern real estate transactions, students tailor their specialization with electives from a broad range of disciplines, including historic preservation, international business and trade in agriculture, land use control and public finance.

“Most business or commercial real estate lawyers need to know about the implications and consequences that sustainability, the green building movement and climate change will have on the real estate industry,” said Celeste Hammond, director of the Center for Real Estate Law. “We have been offering courses in sustainability law. We created the certification program in response to increased demand from students and employers alike.”

The LLM in Trial Advocacy and Dispute Resolution complements the law school’s outstanding nationally-ranked program in trial advocacy, and enables JD students to earn a joint JD/LLM degree.

“This new LLM in Trial Advocacy and ADR supports the law school’s mission to educate and train attorneys with broad skills to meet the challenges of the legal profession and is consistent with emerging trends in the national law school community,” said Clinical Professor Susann MacLachlan (JD ’94), director of the Center for Trial Advocacy and Dispute Resolution.

The curriculum includes required courses in Advanced Scientific Evidence, Expert Witnesses, Litigation Technology, Models of Dispute Resolution, and Negotiation Theory and Practice in Primarily Pre-Trial Scenarios. Students will be able to select from 15 electives, three of which—Prosecutorial Ethics, Media Relations and the Advocate, and Environmental Crimes and Prosecution—are available online.

The LLM in Estate Planning, set to begin in fall 2012, will be the second online graduate program. The curriculum for the Employee Benefits Program went online this fall semester. Both of the online LLM programs are designed for part-time students.

“The Center for Tax Law and Employee Benefits is excited about the new LLM in Estate Planning,” said Professor Malcolm L. Morris, associate director of the Graduate Tax Law Programs. “Lawyers with this advanced degree will be practice-ready to help clients deal with the wide range of issues impacting, inter alia, transferring personal and business assets to the next generation, tailoring retirement plans to specific needs, and developing successful tax strategies for transmitting wealth,” he explained.

This program will require students to take courses in Wealth Transfer Taxation I and II; Estate Planning I and II; Income Taxation of Estates and Trusts; and Estate and Trust Administration and Post-Mortem Planning, and choose from a variety of electives. Students also must complete the Comprehensive Estate Plan Project that will require them to work individually on the project with guidance from a faculty member.

Alumni from Lake Forest College Meet

Alumni from Lake Forest College and The John Marshall Law School met with Lake Forest pre-law students. Coordinating the event were (left) Franco LaMarca (JD ’05) and (right) Brian Clauss (JD ’90) with Dean John Corkery.
Alan Taradash describes himself as “just a Chicago kid raised on the South Side,” but this local boy has gone far and achieved much in the 41 years since leaving The John Marshall Law School.

Taradash, 67, accepted the Lawrence R. Baca Lifetime Achievement Award from the Indian Law Section of the Federal Bar Association in April 2011. The award honors an individual who has made significant contributions to the field of Indian law, and who has worked in the field for more than 20 years. Taradash is just the fourth person to receive the award.

A partner at the Nordhaus Law Firm in Albuquerque, New Mexico, Taradash’s first job after law school was in Window Rock, Ariz., on the Navajo Reservation where he was legal services attorney.

A nomination letter from attorneys at his firm notes that Taradash’s law practice “has been dedicated to serving the interests of individual Indians, Indian tribes and tribally owned entities” and that Taradash also mentors young Indian attorneys. “His achievements in this field are unparalleled,” the letter said.

When asked what successes are most satisfying personally, Taradash said that a combination of little things and larger cases make the cut and that his work with the Navajo Nation has been very rewarding.

He notes a case from the 1970s, in a trial before the Army Discharge Review Board, in which he established the legitimacy of Navajo witchcraft as a medical malady. The result of that effort was that the U.S. Army would afford afflicted soldiers the chance to seek traditional Navajo ceremonial treatments.

But Taradash’s satisfaction came in helping the man involved in the case upgrade his discharge papers, which allowed the man to enroll in college, giving him a chance at a better life.

Another case he mentions involves the Red Lake Band of Indians in northern Minnesota. Taradash took over as lead counsel in the early ’90s on a complex case involving land, timber and accounting issues that had been pending for more than 40 years. He secured two judgments totaling more than $80 million for the Red Lake Band. These are among the highest judgments ever entered for a single tribe by the Indian Claims Commission and its successor to the “Claims Commission Cases,” the United States Court of Federal Claims.

Taradash’s law practice has been dedicated to serving the interests of individual Indians, Indian tribes, and tribally owned entities.

Taradash started at John Marshall in 1967, four days after ending a two-year stint in the Peace Corps, where he worked in Bombay (now Mumbai), India. And he recalls fondly the help he received from Dean Noble Lee and women in the Registrar’s Office who let him buy books on credit because he didn’t have any money.

But he speaks most forcefully about the quality of the education he received at John Marshall and of the egalitarian nature of that education.

“The rigor he [Lee] insisted on and the wonderful quality of teaching was just remarkable,” Taradash recalled.

He makes particular mention of the Introduction to Law course. In 1967, students were required to read Charles Kelso’s Programmed Introduction to the Study of Law. “It sort of burned into your brain, as if with a branding iron, the methodology of the law, the analytical approach which included a structured and rigorous examination of cases and legal issues.”

But Taradash also recalls something else.

“As Dean Lee taught us, law is not about making money. It’s a noble profession to be used to aid society and individuals in it,” Taradash said.

And the egalitarian societal view extended to law school admissions, as well, he said, noting that John Marshall accepted students regardless of race, situation or circumstance if they were willing to put in the work needed to succeed.

Taradash is married to Dr. Gloria Taradash and they have five children.

Lt. Col. Dyer’s CULTURAL KNOWLEDGE HELPS Military In a Crisis

Stephen Dyer (JD ’85) learned Japanese to save his University of Notre Dame scholarship. He enhanced his knowledge during a two-year Rotary Foundation Ambassadorial Fellowship to Japan between his first and second years of law school.

His combination of Japanese culture, language and experience, together with his presence in Honolulu, turned out to be an advantageous mix 10 years ago when a fatal ship accident could have escalated into international discord.

On Feb. 9, 2001, the Ehime Maru, a Japanese fishing trawler owned by the government of Ehime Prefecture, was in the midst of a 74-day training mission for high school students interested in becoming fishermen. The 191-foot-long ship, which had docked at Honolulu the day before, was carrying 35 people.

Also on that date, the USS Greenville, a U.S. Navy submarine, was in the midst of a demonstration for civilian visitors there to see the submarine’s capabilities.

Shortly before 2 p.m. on that hazy Friday afternoon about nine nautical miles off the coast of Oahu, the USS Greenville collided with the Ehime Maru while demonstrating an emergency rapid-ascent maneuver. The submarine’s rudder sliced the Japanese ship, which almost immediately began to sink. The Greenville was too large to get close enough to help those who had been tossed overboard. In the end, nine people died including four high school students.

That Friday night, Dyer, an attorney at the Honolulu firm of Ayabe Chong Nishimoto Sia & Nakamura, was getting ready to take clients to dinner when the JAG office at U.S. Pacific Command (PACOM) called asking for his assistance. They wanted him to meet with the Ehime Maru captain and crew to show PACOM’s level of concern and respect. They visited the crew late that evening at the U.S. Coast Guard facility where they had been taken after rescue. The crew were all wearing prisoner jumpsuits, as all their belongings had been lost. The captain was at first startled that the 6-foot-2-inch, green-eyed American was speaking Japanese to him. But then, Dyer believes, the captain drew some comfort from being able to communicate in his native language.

“In this situation, doing the right thing was doing it the Japanese way, or at least understanding Japanese customs and meeting their loss with compassion and understanding on their terms,” Dyer said.

In Japanese culture, the importance of doing the right thing cannot be overstated, Dyer said.

“In this situation, doing the right thing was doing it the Japanese way, or at least understanding Japanese customs and meeting their loss with compassion and understanding on their terms,” he said.

Dyer set about arranging for basic necessities for the survivors, communicating information from the continued search for the nine missing Japanese and from the investigation into the accident, and assisting both the crew and their families, as well as advising PACOM leadership, in the immediate aftermath.

During those efforts, understanding Japanese culture was a way to avoid missteps that could make the situation worse. Dyer knew, for example, that rather than hand a check to the captain to purchase clothing and supplies for his crew, Japanese custom dictated that each man receive an envelope with his name inscribed in Kanji with crisp new cash inside.

By the following day, the facts had been sorted out and Dyer was authorized to make a formal apology to the Ehime Maru captain and crew when he delivered the envelopes. Dyer had earned a black belt in the martial art of Iaido (the way of the samurai sword), where he learned the movements for ritual apology, and he employed those in delivering the official apology on behalf of the United States government.

Lt. Col. Dyer... continued on page 11
“If my efforts had any effect, it was that things could have turned out much worse if we hadn’t approached things in the right way,” Dyer said. “I think it was the start of our making lemonade out of lemons.”

Dyer was invited to a memorial service in Honolulu earlier this year, marking the 10-year anniversary of the accident. He seems to downplay his role, but the U.S. military has a different sense of his efforts. PACOM awarded Dyer the Joint Service Achievement Medal for his actions, noting that he was called in on short notice “to assist with the urgent handling of international issues” and that his efforts were “invaluable to reaching an amicable resolution.”

Professor Robert “Gil” Johnston, who taught Dyer when he was a student at John Marshall, said that Dyer acted admirably. “He is credited with defusing an extremely embarrassing incident for the U.S.,” Johnston said, “and avoiding what was rapidly mounting into a major international incident.”

Says Dyer, “I was just doing my job, but I’m thinking I was the right guy in the right place at the right time.”

and she was asked to apply when the clerk position became open.

“I think this is probably the best job in the world,” she said. “Bankruptcy is one of the few areas of law that is still malleable, and it’s a hot topic given the state of the economy.”

Barry and the other clerks conduct legal research and draft opinions, prepare memos for the judge detailing cases and suggesting rulings and then meet with him to discuss the options.

“Judge Black considers his law clerks to be his legal counsel. Our job is to advise the judge on every matter that comes before him,” Barry said. “As his senior clerk, I review everything before it goes to the judge. The buck stops here.”

Michael DeMarino (JD ’09) was a commercial litigator at Reed Smith, before beginning a prestigious clerkship in September with Justice William Bauer on the U.S. Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit.

“Aside from it being a feather in your cap,” DeMarino said, “the experience is going to be invaluable, with enormous learning opportunities. This is a dream job.”

To get the coveted position, DeMarino researched more than 50 of Bauer’s opinions.

“I think I had a good understanding of the judge and his rulings,” DeMarino said, which prepared him for the 30-minute one-on-one interview with Bauer. “The difference-maker is how well you mesh with the judge.”

Jason Koransky (JD ’10) clerked for Judge Harry Leinenweber at the U.S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois from September 2010 through September 2011.

Koransky had “amazing experiences,” participating in civil and criminal matters in federal court, including patent, trademark, civil rights and terrorism cases. Today he practices law at Kirkland & Ellis LLP.

“The clerks have to provide the judge an accurate and succinct analysis of the issues in each case before us,” he said.

Koransky, who was editor of DownBeat magazine for 10 years, said John Marshall was a good fit for him, with its evening division offerings and accommodations for non-traditional students. With his interest in intellectual property law, Koransky said he found “phenomenal” IP offerings, along with a really good writing program, and emphasis on “teaching practical skills.”

“It’s important to know that the top students at John Marshall are as good as the top students at any of the top 10 law schools in the country,” Koransky said.

Erin McKibben (JD ’10) began her one-year clerkship in January 2011 with Judge Charles Norgle (JD ’69), and calls her clerkship “the best job a new lawyer could have.”

Norgle said the role of a clerk is key to the judicial process: “Good adversaries and an intelligent, well-educated law clerk are vital to the court’s decision-making process.”

Professor Paul Lewis, chair of the Judicial Clerkship Committee, says federal clerkships historically have been very difficult to attain and have become even more competitive in the difficult job market.

“This recent achievement is a testament not only to the skills and preparedness of our strongest students, but also to the tremendous efforts exhibited by the Career Services Office,” Lewis said. “They do a great job.”

Third-year student Rob Olmstead, who begins a clerkship position in January 2012 with Leinenweber, said he found it particularly beneficial to have Professor Mary Nagel (JD ’88) serve as his mentor during the extended application process. Nagel clerked for two judges in the Circuit Court of Cook County. Olmstead described Nagel as a tough professor, and said he chose her as his mentor for that very reason.

“If I could survive a mock interview with her, the actual interview would be a piece of cake,” he said.

Black sees a federal judicial clerkship as a “win-win” situation with both the clerk and the judge reaping tremendous benefits.

“For the clerk it is a unique chance to see a court from the inside. For the judge it is a chance to receive legal advice from a gifted young attorney,” he said. “Usually, both benefit from the formation of a close personal relationship that is almost like family. Indeed, when former clerks become parents, my wife and I consider their children to be our ‘grandclerks.’”

During the past 10 years, Black has had seven law clerks, six of whom are John Marshall graduates.

“Each year on the anniversary of my appointment as a federal judge, my wife and I host a reunion dinner for former clerks and their spouses or significant others,” Black said. “It is always one of the highlights of my year, and it always reminds me that my law clerks make my job the best job in the world.”
When Margaret “Peggy” Frossard finished college in 1973 at Northwestern University, she wasn’t thinking of law school. She was dreaming of a career in broadcast journalism. But the 21-year-old honor student’s plans were stalled when she was wait-listed for the master’s degree program at Northwestern’s prestigious Medill School of Journalism. Rather than take a job working full-time at the U.S. Postal Service, Frossard started law school.

“One door closes and another opens up,” recounts Frossard, most recently the presiding justice on the Illinois Appellate Court, First Division.

From Chicago-Kent College of Law to the Cook County State’s Attorney’s Office, the Cook County Circuit Court and the Illinois Appellate Court benches, the would-be broadcaster has forged a formidable legal career that now brings her to The John Marshall Law School.

Frossard joined John Marshall on March 31, 2011, as the school’s first director of Professionalism and Engagement.

“We are enthusiastic about her helping us to become a better law school,” said Dean John E. Corkery.

The new position arises out of goals of helping students develop their sense of professionalism and engagement with their education, with faculty and staff fostering those efforts by modeling professional conduct for students, according to Corkery.

“I believe that Peggy, as a recent Illinois Appellate Court justice, is uniquely qualified to do this for our students,” Corkery said.

Frossard is no stranger to John Marshall. She is married to alumnus Steve Yonover (JD ’77), and during her time on the appellate bench she worked with many student interns, some of them from John Marshall.

“My goal is to promote student engagement which will provide the foundation for professionalism and prepare students to become responsible, dignified members of the legal community,” she said. “I will also work with deans, faculty and staff to create an atmosphere of good customer service for our students.”

When Frossard graduated from law school, she spent a week sitting in the office of the Cook County Public Defender, trying to get a job. She never got an interview there, and instead was hired on at the Cook County State’s Attorney’s Office, where she remained for 12 years, eventually becoming chief of the Felony Trial Division, where she supervised 200 appellate and trial attorneys.

Frossard’s next move was to the Cook County Circuit Court, where she spent approximately 10 years on the bench before being assigned to the Illinois Appellate Court in 1997. She has just completed her 26th year of teaching Introduction to Trial Advocacy at Northwestern, and will continue to teach Advanced Trial Advocacy at John Marshall.
